

Easy food swaps to make for your heart

Instead of having a baked potato with dinner, bake a heart-healthy sweet potato instead. Sweet potatoes are high in potassium, which can help lower blood pressure.

Use olive oil instead of butter in your cooking. Olive oil is full of healthy, unsaturated fats.

Instead of having pancakes for breakfast, choose oatmeal. Whole grains are good for your heart, so choose steel cut oats over instant oats, which can be high in sodium.

Pass on the queso dip at your next Mexican night and whip up some guacamole instead. Avocados are full of healthy, unsaturated fats.

Instead of buying ground chuck for your homemade burgers or tacos, use lean ground beef.

"Many people think making heart-healthy choices is all-or-nothing when it comes to the food they love," says Christopher Shuff, a registered dietitian. "But swapping out high-fat cuts of beef for leaner cuts means you can still enjoy your favorite foods while taking care of your heart."

Craving something sweet? Reach for dark chocolate instead of milk chocolate. The American Heart Association recommends eating chocolate that contains 70-85% cacao.

For dessert, choose chocolate-covered strawberries instead of chocolate cake. You'll satisfy your sweet tooth without all the extra sugar and unhealthy fats.
